Long ago, there was a mountain near the sea in far eastern China called Flower Fruit Mountain. On the top of the mountain, there was a rock. One day, the rock exploded and out jumped a little monkey. The little monkey found other monkeys and became their king.

After some time, Monkey King went to learn martial arts with a Taoist priest, and was given the new name, Sun Wukong. He learned how to become big or small, to do somersaults, and even to fly! He also owned a golden rod which he used to defeat all his evil enemies.

Although Sun Wukong was smart, he was quite naughty. Once Sun Wukong sneaked into the Palace of Heaven and ate all the magic peaches. He also defeated all the soldiers and warriors of the Emperor of Heaven. After all this, he proudly proclaimed himself to be the "Sage of the Heaven."

Sun Wukong is a fictional character in a novel called "A Journey to the West." In the book, Sun Wukong, Pigsy, Sandy and their master Xuanzang (The Great Monk) traveled on foot to India in order to seek holy books. They went through many difficulties and challenges to get past all the evil monsters in their adventure. Sun Wukong is a symbol of wisdom, justice and bravery.

He has become a great hero and is dearly loved by children in China.
